

Careers with Skills in World Languages and Cultures

Multilingual and Multicultural Skills Matter in All Professions!

Anything You Want!

Knowledge of a world language is a marketable skill!

The ability to communicate in more than one language opens a wide range of career prospects in many areas of government service, business, and education, health professions, and industry.

Being multilingual will help you distinguish yourself from other applicants on the job market.

Multilingual communication skills are a strong asset for any company or service provider.

In most career branches, multilingual skills provide a job applicant with increased employment opportunities, more opportunities to travel, and higher salary.

The Best Plan?

DOUBLE MAJOR!

Combine your major in World Languages and Cultures with a degree in another field.

Most degrees require you to take 40+ credits of electives to meet graduation requirements. The BA in World Languages and Cultures requires only 33 credit hours.

Use your electives and rather than selecting random courses, take the courses for your second major instead.

Most double majors enable you to meet both degree requirements in eight semesters without additional credit hours.

The 2nd Best Plan?

Add a MINOR!

Spanish, French, or German Minor

Requires 18 credit hours:
 Intermediate II plus five courses at the 3000/4000 level

International Studies Minor

Requires 18 credit hours:
 2 courses in World Languages plus 4 courses in Interdisciplinary Studies

Multilingual Competency is Relevant for Every Career
